Chicken Corners - One of the more popular "easy" trails in the area, it follows a beautiful shelf road and eventually runs along the Colorado River with plenty of viewpoints along the way. The last portion, known as "Chicken Corners," gives you a straight-down view of the river below.

Elephant Hill - This trail has some of the most amazing scenery and solitude in the area accessible by four-wheel drive. Along the route, you are immersed in the thousands of colorful sandstone spires that come up from the desert floor, washes, cliff edges, and narrow slot canyons.

Gemini Bridges - Located north of Moab, in Grand County, this scenic trail is one of the most popular in Moab. If you are looking for the real Moab experience, this is it.

Geyser Pass - Geyser Pass is a high mountain pass at an elevation of 3,231m (10,600ft) above the sea level, located in San Juan County, in Utah, USA. It's one of the highest mountain roads of Utah.

Klondike Bluffs - Dinosaur tracks, slickrock, and washes - consider this trail your very own off-road Jurassic Park experience, without the risk of being eaten by Velociraptors. Sitting just north of Moab and bordering the 300-million years old formations of Arches National Park is truly an enjoyable and interesting 4WD trail.

Mirramack and Monitor - This offroad trail is hidden amidst the paved and improved tourist areas directly off of Highway 313. It takes you to a more up-close and personal view of Merrimac and Monitor Buttes as well as giving you a good bird's-eye view down into Seven Mile Canyon.

Onion Creek & Fisher Towers - Onion Creek is a must-do trail in the Moab area. No matter what your wheeling style is, the drive is sensory overload as you meander through several different rock formations formed hundreds of millions of years ago. The contrasts from the start of the trail to its end are simply startling.

Potash Road - This scenic drive located just three miles north of Moab follows the Colorado river and continues on a dirt road to Canyonlands National Park.

Shafer - Easy and iconic, the Shafer Trail is a must do when visiting Moab. Originally a cattle trail, it was constructed into a useable road for trucks hauling uranium in the 1940s. The incredible and imposing rim walls still stand to remind you of just how grand planet Earth really is.

Thompson Canyon - A nice, short drive that offers the beauty and serenity of the Floy Canyon Wilderness Study Area, one of the many wilderness study areas managed by the Bureau of Land Management in Utah. The lands surrounding the Thompson Canyon area protected, so remaining on the designated roadway is important.

White Rim - The White Rim Trail is the premier multi-day trail in Moab. The entire route encompasses over 90 miles of off-road driving. On the White Rim, you'll get to experience the beautiful scenery of the Island in the Sky district of Canyonlands National Park first hand while tackling the challenging terrain.
